Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Third Department, New York.

In the Matter of FRIENDS OF the SHAWANGUNKS, INC., Appellant, v.

ZONING BOARD OF APPEALS OF TOWN OF GARDINER et al., Respondents.

Nov. 6, 2008.

Synopsis

Background: Appeal was taken from a judgment of the Supreme Court, Ulster County, Cahill, J., dismissing application under article 78 to review a town zoning board's decision to grant area variances to construct a driveway along an existing easement.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Malone Jr., J., held that:

- [1] board conducted adequate State Environmental Quality Review Act (SEQRA) review when it issued a negative declaration with regard to driveway's environmental impact;
- [2] zoning regulation barring construction of roads on slopes greater than 30% under any circumstances did not apply to driveways; and
- [3] board's determination to grant area variances was not arbitrary or an abuse of discretion.

Affirmed.

[2] Environmental Law Assessments and impact statements

Appellate Division's review of a zoning board's issuance of a negative declaration under State Environmental Quality Review Act (SEQRA) is limited to ascertaining whether the board identified the relevant areas of environmental concern, took a hard look at them, and made a reasoned elaboration of the basis for its determination. McKinney's ECL § 8-0101.

[3] Environmental Law Land use in general

Town zoning board, which granted four area variances for construction of driveway, conducted adequate State Environmental Quality Review Act (SEQRA) review when it issued a negative declaration with regard to driveway's environmental impact; board engaged in a lengthy analysis of relevant environmental concerns, including identification of threatened or endangered plants and animals on or near the site, proximity to historical landmarks and places, water run-off or erosion issues, and potential visual impact of the project. [4] Zoning and Planning ↗ Other particular terms and uses

Town zoning regulation barring construction of roads on slopes greater than 30% under any circumstances did not apply to driveways, which were separately regulated.

[5] Zoning and Planning ↗ Power to grant in general

Zoning and Planning ↗ Hardship, Loss, or Injury

Zoning boards of appeal are invested by the Legislature with the power to vary zoning regulations in specific cases in order to avoid unnecessary hardship or practical difficulties arising from a literal application of the zoning law.

[6] Zoning and Planning ↗ Area variances in general

In making its determination whether to grant area variances, town zoning board was required to engage in a balancing test, weighing the proposed benefit to applicants against the possible detriment to the health, safety and welfare of the community, as well as consider five statutory factors for granting variances. [7] Zoning and Planning ↗ Area variances in general

Town zoning board's determination to grant area variances necessary to construct 3200 foot driveway along existing easement was not arbitrary or an abuse of discretion; board determined that driveway would not create undesirable change in character of the neighborhood because it would not be visible from neighboring homes or surrounding areas, that the benefit sought could not be achieved by any other means, and that the applicants' hardship was not self-created as they owned the parcel long before zoning restrictions were enacted. Opinion*MALONE JR., J.

*883 Appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court (Cahill, J.), entered February 14, 2008 in Ulster County, which dismissed petitioner's application, in a proceeding pursuant to CPLR article 78, to review a determination of respondent Zoning Board of Appeals of the Town of Gardiner granting area variances to respondents Werner Wustrau and Joan Wustrau.

Respondents Werner Wustrau and Joan Wustrau (hereinafter collectively referred to as respondents) own a 40-acre landlocked *884 parcel of property in the Town of Gardiner, Ulster County, that is situated within an area subjected to the Shawangunk Ridge Protection Regulations enacted by the Town in 2006 (see Town of Gardiner Zoning Law § 220-13.1). In December 2006, respondents submitted an application to respondent Zoning Board of Appeals of the Town of Gardiner (hereinafter ZBA) requesting area variances to construct a 3,200-foot driveway over the land of their neighbor, William Brown, over **240 which respondents maintain an easement along an existing dirt road. Specifically, recognizing that the regulations prohibited construction on slopes greater than 30% in grade, the construction of driveways longer than 2,500 feet, with more than 250 feet located on a slope graded between 20% and 30%, and the cutting or grading of an area more than eight feet wide, respondents requested four separate area variances.

The ZBA appointed itself lead agency for review of the application under the State Environmental Quality Review Act (see ECL art. 8) (hereinafter SEQRA) and classified the project as an unlisted action. At the conclusion of a seven-month review, the ZBA determined that the proposed driveway would not have a significant environmental impact, issued a negative declaration and granted the variances. This CPLR article 78 proceeding by petitioner ensued. Although Supreme Court found that the project was more appropriately classified as a type II action for SEQRA purposes—and, thus, was not subjected to SEQRA review—the court also determined that the ZBA nevertheless conducted adequate SEQRA review before granting the variances, and dismissed the petition. Petitioner now appeals.

[1] Initially, we agree with petitioner that judicial review of the propriety of an administrative determination is limited to the grounds invoked by the agency at the time the determination was made and a court may not confirm on other grounds that it finds to be more proper (see Matter of Berchielli v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Westerlo, 202 A.D.2d 733, 734, 608 N.Y.S.2d 570 [1994], lv. denied 83 N.Y.2d 757, 615 N.Y.S.2d 874, 639 N.E.2d 415 [1994]). As such, Supreme Court exceeded its scope of review in determining that the project constituted a type II action, and our analysis will focus on the propriety of the ZBA's determination based upon its classification of the project as an unlisted action. We disagree, however, with petitioner's contention that the ZBA failed to conduct an adequate SEQRA review and that the issuance of the negative declaration was an abuse of discretion.

[2] [3] This Court's review of a zoning board's issuance of a negative declaration is limited to ascertaining whether the board "identified the relevant areas of environmental concern, took a 'hard' *885 look' at them, and made a 'reasoned elaboration' of the basis for its determination" (Matter of Jackson v. New York State Urban Dev. Corp., 67 N.Y.2d 400, 417, 503 N.Y.S.2d 298, 494 N.E.2d 429 [1986], quoting Aldrich v. Pattison, 107 A.D.2d 258, 265, 486 N.Y.S.2d 23 [1985]; accord  Matter of Eadie v. Town Bd. of Town of N. Greenbush, 7 N.Y.3d 306, 318, 821 N.Y.S.2d 142, 854 N.E.2d 464 [2006]). Here, before issuing the negative declaration, the ZBA engaged in a lengthy analysis of the relevant environmental concerns, including the identification of threatened or endangered plants and animals on or near the site, the proximity to historical landmarks and places, water runoff or erosion issues, and the potential visual impact of the project. During the course of the process, among other things, the ZBA reviewed a full environmental assessment form, solicited input from the Department of Environmental Conservation and neighboring landowners, reviewed reports prepared by two engineering firms and conducted an on-site visual assessment of respondents' property. In addition, numerous public meetings were held to allow the community to comment and voice concerns (see Matter of Mayes v. Cooper, 283 A.D.2d 760, 761, 724 N.Y.S.2d 791 [2001]). Based on this record, it is evident that the ZBA properly identified areas of environmental concern **241 and took the requisite hard look at them prior to issuing a well-reasoned negative declaration and, thus, its issuance of a negative declaration will not be disturbed.

[4] [5] Nor do we find that the ZBA lacked authority to grant the area variances to respondents or that it abused its discretion in doing so. Specifically, petitioner claims that the ZBA was without authority to grant the variances because, according to the Shawangunk Ridge Protection Regulations, the construction of roads on slopes greater than 30% is not permitted “under any circumstances” (Town of Gardiner Zoning Law § 220–13.1[F][4][g][2] ). However, the language cited by petitioner applies only to “roads,” as distinct from “driveways,” which are separately regulated (see Town of Gardiner Zoning Law § 220–13.1[F][4][g][1], [4], [6], [7] ). In any event, zoning boards of appeal are “ ‘invested [by the Legislature] with the power to vary zoning regulations in specific cases in order to avoid unnecessary hardship or practical difficulties arising from a literal application of the zoning law’ ” (Matter of Kodogiannis v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Malta, 42 A.D.3d 739, 739–740, 839 N.Y.S.2d 588 [2007], quoting  Matter of Tall Trees Constr. Corp. v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Huntington, 97 N.Y.2d 86, 90, 735 N.Y.S.2d 873, 761 N.E.2d 565 [2001]; see Town Law § 267–b; Matter of Real Holding Corp. v. Lehigh, 2 N.Y.3d 297, 299, 778 N.Y.S.2d 438, 810 N.E.2d 890 [2004] ). As such, petitioner’s contention that the ZBA lacked authority to grant the variances at issue is without merit.

[6] [7] Finally, in making its determination whether to grant the *886 area variances, the ZBA was required to engage in a balancing test, weighing the proposed benefit to respondents against the possible detriment to the health, safety and welfare of the community (see Town Law § 267–b [3] ), as well as consider the five statutory factors enumerated in Town Law § 267–b (3) (see  Matter of Pecoraro v. Board of Appeals of Town of Hempstead, 2 N.Y.3d 608, 612–613, 781 N.Y.S.2d 234, 814 N.E.2d 404 [2004]; Matter of North Country Citizens for Responsible Growth, Inc. v. Town of Potsdam Planning Bd., 39 A.D.3d 1098, 1101, 834 N.Y.S.2d 568 [2007] ). Here, the ZBA determined that the proposed driveway will not create an undesirable change in the character of the neighborhood as it will not be visible from neighboring homes or surrounding areas. It also concluded that the benefit sought by respondents cannot be achieved by any other means inasmuch as the engineer for the Town considered alternatives but ultimately concluded that the proposed configuration of the driveway was the best possible option. Although the variances sought are substantial, the ZBA determined that the driveway will not have a substantial impact on the community in that the size of the lots in the surrounding area, as well as the abundant natural screening, will ensure that the driveway will not be visible from a nearby road or other houses. Finally, the ZBA determined that respondents’ hardship was not self-created as they owned the parcel long before the zoning restrictions were enacted. Based on the record presented, it cannot be said that the ZBA’s determination to grant the area variances was arbitrary or an abuse of discretion and, according deference to such determination, it will not be disturbed (see  Matter of Ifrah v. Utschig, 98 N.Y.2d 304, 307, 746 N.Y.S.2d 667, 774 N.E.2d 732 [2002]; Matter of North Country Citizens for Responsible Growth, Inc. v. Town of Potsdam Planning Bd., 39 A.D.3d at 1102, 834 N.Y.S.2d 568).

Petitioner’s remaining contentions, including its claim of impermissible segmentation, **242 have been considered and found to be without merit.

ORDERED that the judgment is affirmed, without costs.

MERCURE, J.P., SPAIN and STEIN, JJ., concur.
